Derrida's first book-length work, The Problem of Genesis in Husserl's Philosophy, was originally written as a dissertation for his diplôme d'études supérieures in 1953 and 1954. Surveying Husserl's major works on phenomenology, Derrida reveals what he sees as an internal tension in Husserl's central notion of genesis, and gives us our first glimpse into the concerns and frustrations that would later lead Derrida to abandon phenomenology and develop his now famous method of deconstruction.

If we take the theory of evolution as established and modify our interpretation of Genesis accordingly, then we introduce a problem for the doctrine of Scripture. It is nonsense to speak of the unique and total authority of Scripture at the same time as we change our interpretation of Scripture to accord with theories

In Genesis chapter one the context and text is crystal clear, that God is listing the order of creation according to their time frame, which came first etc. This is the first problem. Now the second problem comes with the whole issue of eating the apple. We all know the story, which Adam and Eve were forbidden from eating from the tree.

In Genesis, Eve and her offspring are exiled from Eden, separated from it, the land becomes bruised and our relationship with it is broken (See Braiding Sweetgrass, Robin Wall Kimmerer, pp.3-10). Has this separation from the garden in Genesis affected how we think about our relationship with the earth?

The Book of Genesis, the first book of the Hebrew Bible and the Christian Old Testament, is an account of the creation of the world, the early history of humanity, Israel's ancestors and the origins of the Jewish people. Its Hebrew name is the same as its first word, Bereshit ("In the beginning"). It is divisible into two parts, the primeval history (chapters 1-11) and the ancestral history ...
